

Eco Kids Corner: Air Quality Bingo

Here's a game to play when you're out and about or on a trip. When you see one of the objects pictured below, color it with pencils, crayons, or markers. Think about how that item affects the environment. Might it cause air pollution? Is it something that helps the environment? Do you use or do any of these things?

If there is more than one player, print one sheet for each person. The first person who sees an object on the bingo board can mark it on their card, but the other players cannot until they see another of that object. The first person to color five objects in a straight line (vertical, horizontal, or diagonal) wins, or play "black out" and the first person to color all the objects on the board wins.
